HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY SUGGESTIONS SHOW HOW TO EAT INEXPENSIVELY

ed that the average cost for the three days runs thirty cents per day per person. Lower costs are possible but would curtail the variety. A small kitchen garden, where lettuce, carrots, beets, etc., are raised, will be a great convenience and add variety at a minimum of cost. In compiling these menus, economy, variety, food value, and as much pleasure as possible in the eating have been kept in mind.

Feeding a family on thirty cents per day per person requires careful planning. For example: one would purchase three pounds of beef for a pot roast for the dinner of the first day of which one-half would be eaten at that meal, a pound used for the shepherd's pie of the second day and a half pound used as minced meat on toast.

DESPITE EFFORTS AND UNWILLINGNESS HOLLAND IS LENDER

(By Associated Press)

THE HAGUE, Netherlands.—Despite her efforts to prevent it, Holland is becoming, perforce, a large lender to the belligerent states. Great Britain set the example of paying for its large supplies of dairy and other produce in exchange bills, and, when Germany demanded the same privilege, neutral Holland could not see its way to refuse, however reluctantly it might regard Berlin paper. Holland has been trying to apply the brake on this downward road that might land it in uncomfortable circumstances but, so far, apparently unsuccessfully.

While these nations demand virtually everything on credit, they require little Holland to pay for her imported goods in cash. In one respect this operates to Holland's advantage owing to the fact that the rates of exchange in Germany and Austria are depressed and Holland purchasers, consequently, pay less now than they would after the war when the exchange rates may have risen.

In the effort to prop up the rate of exchange in Germany and Austria, an organization for the control of exchange values has been formed. No marks or crowns, as the case may be, are permitted to be sent out of Germany or Austria unless authorized by these organizations. This means that German and Austria buyers of Holland goods cannot pay the bills until these controlling bodies have approved the purchase. Checks drawn in payment of luxuries shipped from Holland into Germany and Austria are held up pending approval, the authorities ruling that claims arising from the imports of luxuries cannot be settled until after the war.

Trade between Holland and the Central empires has been seriously hampered by these restrictions.
